Heart Surgeon Was Known For 3-Part Operation

Dr. Aaron N. Gorelik, a well-known heart surgeon, died of a cerebral stroke at Parkchester General Hospital in the Bronx, in New York. He would have been 58 years old the next day. Dr. Gorelik earlier this year headed a team of physicians that operated to correct a congenital heart condition in a four-year-old Greek boy, Stellakis Parthenopoulos, says the New York Times. The operation, which closed a hole in the boy's heart, saved his life.

The boy was the son of a Greek laborer and his operation in the U.S. was made possible through the contributions of various agencies and individuals. The boy and Dr. Gorelik were received at the White House by President Eisenhower. Dr. Gorelik spent many years in research and in experiments, centering his attention on a three-part operation designed to strengthen the heart muscle by increasing its blood supply. He became his own patient, in a sense, ten years ago when, after working with other surgeons in his technique, he had a heart operation of this kind performed on himself.

Dr. Gorelik had recently returned from Israel, where he hoped to establish a hospital for heart patients. He was the author of many technical papers published in medical journals and was a fellow of the International College of Surgeons and the American College of Cardiology.

He was stricken with rheumatic fever as a youth and the disease damaged his heart, leaving him a near invalid for several years. It was this affliction that prompted him to turn his interests toward medicine. He received his medical degree in Beirut and came to the U.S. thirty-five years ago to specialize in heart surgery, says the New York Times. He resided at 2964 Williamsbridge Road in the Bronx.

Surviving are his widow, Sarah; a son, Elihu; a daughter, Mrs. Rena Scherer; his mother, Mrs. Rebecca Gorelik; a brother, Benjamin Gorelik; a sister, Mrs. Raya Schlossberg, and a grandchild.

A.J.C. Report Explains Israel Right To Try Killer

A report published by the American Jewish Congress asserts that Israel, "as the internationally recognized heir and representative of the Jewish victims of Nazism," is the "logical and legitimate instrument" to try Adolf Eichmann for his part in the extermination of Europe's Jews, says the New York Herald Tribune.

The report states that Israel's claim to jurisdiction rests on firm legal as well as moral grounds.

It cites the unanimous adoption by the General Assembly of the United Nations in 1946 of a resolution affirming the principles of international law laid down at the Nurenberg war crimes trial, including the outlawing of mass murder. The report observes:

"If the Nurenberg principles have been incorporated into the common law of mankind, then any nation . . . including Israel . . . that succeeds in obtaining custody of the person of Eichmann would have the right to conduct his trial."

Whether Eichmann was forcibly abducted from Argentina or not is irrelevant, the report continues, citing various precedents from American jurisprudence. The two customarily acknowledged grounds for jurisdiction in criminal cases also lend weight to Israel's claim, it said.

The argument that jurisdiction rests with the territory in which the alleged acts were committed assumes that evidence, witnesses, and other elements necessary for determining fact, are most likely to be found readily where the acts occurred, the report holds.

The American Jewish Congress argues that nowhere else in the world are there more witnesses who can testify to Eichmann's activities and "nowhere in the world has there been as systematic and careful an attempt to collect and retain information relating to his operations" as in Israel.

The other basis for jurisdiction, the nationality of the persons affected by a criminal act, says the New York Herald Tribune, also support Israel's claims, the report says, adding: "as the internationally recognized heir and represen-

Planned Revival Of Community Interest Is Urged

An educational campaign to increase interest in Jewish community affairs and needs has been called for by Dr. Sidney B. Hoenig, professor of Jewish History and director of adult education at Yeshiva University, in New York. Dr. Hoenig, in a report delivered before the recent third general assembly of the Synagogue Council of America, declared that "three factors have been the essentials of community-mindedness throughout Jewish history":

1. The idea of self-imposed identification as a Jew. "One is not merely Orthodox, Conservative, or Reform, or unaffiliated," Dr. Hoenig said. "He is basically a Jew in the community."

2. The desire for self-imposed taxation. He said that a nominal tax on such functions as Bar-Mitzvah parties, weddings, and bar and bas mitzvah registrations would effect consolidation. Distribution of the funds among constituent agencies, schools, or institutions would result in strengthening of the Jewish community, Dr. Hoenig maintained.

3. The need for archives. Archives in which, from early childhood, the Jewish individual records his vital statistics have had the effect of solidarity and consolidation in past communities. Family records of marriage and divorce, birth and death will result, Dr. Hoenig stated, in a closer knit Jewish community aware of its religious ties.

In his report, Dr. Hoenig traced the evolution of the Jewish community from the Graeco-Roman period through the Middle Ages and the French Revolution to the present, showing that adversity shaped the cohesion of the Jewish community which was held together by a sense of common crisis. In the ancient Jewish community in Egypt, the local synagogue was not merely a house of worship, Dr. Hoenig points out, but the heart of the local community. When Christianity became the state religion, Jewish cohesion was "strangely fortified by Christian waves of hostility."

Dr. Hoenig points to the increase in the freedom of individual conduct as having contributed to the breakdown of the Jewish community. In the medieval communities, majority rule dominated, he said, forcing individuals to comply. "The individual had to willingly contract to be part of the community and therefore everything depended upon the sanctity of the contract. The effectiveness of thus being bound to the community is worthy of consideration even in modern associations," Dr. Hoenig asserts.

With the sense of full equality established in the wake of the French Revolution many devastat-

$25 Million Loan Is For Israel Port Of Ashdod

Israel's progress as a maritime nation was advanced while engineers announced completion of two years of planning for the Port of Ashdod on the Mediterranean. Israeli officials were in Washington, D.C., completing negotiations with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for a $25,000,000 loan. The plans call for a deep-web harbor.

A spokesman for the World Bank indicated that the application was being given favorable consideration and said it might be granted soon, says the New York Times. Spencer Flournoy, project manager for Frederic R. Harris, Inc., consulting engineers who developed the master plan for Port Ashod, said the main work was scheduled to begin in May, 1961.

Ashdod now is a community of about 3,000, twenty-three miles south of Tel Aviv. By 1975 the planners expect it to be Israel's chief center of commerce with a population of about 160,000.

Construction bids will probably be called for early in September. The engineering and construction concerns that get the contracts are expected to employ thousands of Israeli workers.

A feature of the projected Port of Ashod will be a huge breakwater in the shape of a rounded L, built out into the Mediterranean. A lee breakwater will be perpendicular to the shore. Inside the harbor the plans call for sixteen berths and, ultimately, thirty such pier sidings.

A total of $65,000,000 is planned for Israel's port construction. About $46,000,000 will go to Port Ashdod and the balance will be used for improving the present major port of Haifa, north of Tel Aviv.

The volume of Israel's citrus crop is increasing yearly as desert reclamation projects expand. In addition, Israel is increasing her exports of phosphates from the Negev and potash and bromine from the Dead Sea deposits.

Haifa is handling 2,480,000 tons of cargo each year and by 1965, according to the planners, it will be 4,300,000 tons. Nathan Raviv, Israeli Trade Commissioner in New York, said exports had expanded by 37 per cent in recent years.

The timetable for construction of the Port of Ashdod coincides with the scheduled expansion of imports and exports during the coming decade, says the New York Times. Probably in the early 1970's, Israel expects to be able to discontinue the current time-consuming and costly cargo lighterage at Tel Aviv and Jaffa. By 1975 Port Ashdod is expected to be bigger and therefore busier than Haifa.

Talented Executive Head Of Fox Film Productions Got Over 40 Academy Awards

Buddy Adler, aged fifty-one years, executive head of production at 20th Century-Fox Studio, died of lung cancer, in Hollywood, in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital. He had been ill a month. His home was in Beverly Hills. During his twenty-four years in Hollywood as writer, producer and production head, he received more than forty Academy Award nominations for his films.

Of producing, he once said: "A producer's job is a good deal the same as that of the general manager of a department store. He calls in the buyers, discusses how much they should spend for the merchandise, approves the samples, sits in with the advertising department and checks how the sales are going."

Buddy Adler was born E. Maurice Adler in New York, says the New York Herald Tribune, of a family which owned the Adler chain of department stores. The nickname "Buddy," given him by his family and friends, had been his only first name since his college days at the University of Pennsylvania.

He began his career by writing advertising copy for the family stores, but used his spare time to write short stories for "Liberty" magazine under the nom de plume of "Bradley Allen." He announced soon afterward that he intended to quit "ad" writing, and with the consent and backing of his family, went to Hollywood in 1936 to write short subjects for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. "Quicker than a Wink," one of the shorts, won an Academy Award in 1940.

He became interested in theater operation, and started the first newsreel theater in Hollywood. He added other newsreel houses, and a chain of "Hitching Post" theaters in California which specialized in showing first-run Westerns. He also operated the Beverly-Canon Theater which specialized in foreign films.

He was a writer-producer for M-G-M when he entered military service in 1941 as a reserve officer assigned to the Army Signal Corps. By the end of World War II, he became a lieutenant colonel and chief of the motion picture division of the Army Pictorial Service, says the New York Herald Tribune. He returned to M-G-M as a producer in 1945, then shifted to Columbia Pictures in a similar post.

His greatest success during his seven years with Columbia was "From Here to Eternity," which took the Academy Award in 1954. His casting of Frank Sinatra as "Maggio" in the picture was the principal factor in reviving the singer's career as an actor and singer.

He joined Darryl F. Zanuck's production staff at 20th Century-Fox Studio in 1954. In the next two years, he produced a string of outstanding films, "Violent Saturday," "Love is a Many-Splendored Thing," "Bus Stop," "Anastasia," "Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison," and "A Hatful of Rain."

Mr. Zanuck stepped down in 1956, becoming an independent producer, and Mr. Adler was named head of production at 20th Century-Fox. The next year, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences honored him with the Irving Thalberg award for consistently high standards of film production.

Under his leadership, 20th Century-Fox received a record twenty-one Academy Award nominations in 1957 and matched this accomplishment the next year.

Mr. Adler founded the studio's talent school in 1957, built a small theater where its students could act, and gave them frequent opportunities to perform before audiences of producers and directors, says the New York Herald Tribune. Joanne Woodward, Elvis Presley, Pat Boone, Tommy Sands, Don Murray, Hope Lange, and Diane Varsi are among the young actors he helped to develop.

Some of the more recent major pictures completed under his administration were: "Peyton Place," "The Sound and the Fury," "The two ounces of yeast

four eggs
one-half cup cooking oil
one-quarter cup sugar
one-half cup lukewarm water (extra) nine to ten cups flour

Beat three eggs, sugar, and oil. Add one-half cup of the three cups of lukewarm water. Dissolve the yeast in the extra one-half cup warm water, and leave for five minutes, then mix and pour into other mixture. Sift flour and salt together and slowly mix this alternately with the rest of the warm water with the original mixture until a soft dough is formed. Put on a floured board and knead for ten minutes. Then return to bowl and allow it to stand for one-half hour to rise. Knead again, and again allow it to stand for another one-half to three-quarters of an hour. It must rise to double its size and should be in a warm place, but not too hot. Cut into as many portions as desired and make into any shape desired. Place in greased baking pans and allow to stand for another half hour. Bake in a moderate oven of about 350 degrees. Beat the fourth egg well with a pinch of sugar, then brush the bread with this mixture just before putting into oven. Baking time is from three-quarters to one hour.

Israeli Scientist Turns Detective

BY POLICE SUPERINTENDENT MEYER A. KAPLAN, OF ISRAEL

It may seem unlikely, perhaps even incongruous, that the Weismann Institute of Science, in Israel, with its almost cloistered atmosphere, conducts investigations, not only into the laws of nature, but into the nature of crimes, among them, homicide, arson, rape, and burglary. For several years now, the Institute has quietly rendered immeasurable assistance to the police and courts of Israel for whom it has unravelled the most complex and unorthodox problems of physical evidence.

Twentieth century crime detection relies largely on the apparatus and special skills of the modern world. Clearly, the Israel Police Force could not afford the scientific personnel or equipment which the Weismann Institute has frequently placed at its disposal. A telling example of this cooperation is in the sphere of emission spectrography which detects and identifies minute traces of various materials, such as glass fragments, paint smears, and so forth. Here, not only did the Institute carry out hundreds of essential examinations for us, but an Institute scientist, Dr. Joseph Jaffe, found us a used spectrograph, put it in good order, installed it, and trained some of our men in its use.

The celebrated instance of a police spectrographic examination conducted at the Weizmann Institute was the case of the priceless antiques stolen from the Bezalel Museum in Jerusalem. The golden ceremonial objects had been melted down in order to prevent identification, and to make their disposal easier. We suspected that this was done at an upholsterer's shop where they had first been filed down. An iron file was eventually discovered on the premises, and sent on to Dr. Jaffe for examination in the Institute's large Littrow Spectrograph. The spectral lines of gold were clearly discernible on the spectrograph, giving us circumstantial proof of our suspicions.

Dr. Jaffe has worked with equal success on the side of the defense. Contrary, perhaps, to rumor, the Police Force is eager for this kind of expert defense testimony which forces it, more and more, into rigorous examination procedures and furthers the promotion of justice. But the spectrographic examinations are only one aspect of help given by the Institute. Institute scientists have served us well also in an unofficial consultative capacity particularly in intricate problems of physics, to name just one other field.

A man's body was once found at some distance from a building. The pathological examination revealed that it had been smashed by a great force which might be explained either by a traffic accident, or by a fall from a building. The traffic accident theory was ruled out because of the location. It seemed impossible that, at this particular spot, a car could work up sufficient speed to cause such physical damage, or that the body had fallen from the nearest building because the distance between them was too large.

Dr. Jaffe was called in. He figured out that if the deceased had run fast enough, taking a running jump from the nearest building, we could account for the state of his body. It was later ascertained that the dead man had, indeed, been an athlete of sorts, and that the running speed estimated by Dr. Jaffe had been well within his capacity. Thus, a theory of suicide, strongly suggested by motivational factors, was proved by scientific calculations which could only be made by the most highly qualified scientists.

Grandson Of Famous Poet; Son Of "Exodus" Star, Is Bar-Mitzvah In Israel

BY A. POTASHNIK

On a sunny Saturday morning, a 13-year-old boy from New York City stepped to the lectern of Congregation Emeth Ve Emunah in Jerusalem. In a clear Hebrew chant, with an American accent, Dan Opatoshu, the grandson of Joseph Opatoshu, the famous Yiddish poet and author, began the traditional "maftir" of his bar-mitzvah. Through the hushed atmosphere of the synagogue, the confident young voice rose and fell in the ancient melody used in reading from the Prophets.

Seated in the congregation was Dan's father, David Opatoshu, the popular Broadway and television actor, who had just completed his filming of the role of "Akivah" in the Otto Preminger production of Leon Uris's, "Exodus". Also there were his mother and his grandmother who had come from New York to Jerusalem for the occasion. Other relatives, uncles, aunts, and cousins, had gathered in Jerusalem, from cities, towns, and kibbutzim all over Israel. For many of them the bar-mitzvah was their first opportunity to meet the Opatoshu family from New York and to reunite with other members of their family in Israel. In the synagogue, also, were a number of young boys with whom Dan had made friends during the short time he had been in the country.

Rabbi Aaron Philipp, the leader of Congregation Emeth Ve Emunah, congratulated Dan on his flawless rendition of the Haftorah. Speaking in English, Rabbi Philipp told Dan that he had been greatly privileged that his family had arranged for the celebration of his bar-mitzvah in the Holy City of Jerusalem. The Rabbi praised the Society for the Advancement of Judaism in New York, where the young Opatoshu had attended classes for the past five years, and where he had studied in preparation for his bar-mitzvah.

Following the synagogue services, a reception in honor of the bar-mitzvah boy was held at the Jerusalem home of his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Krown. A festive buffet table had been set in the living room which was decorated with fresh flowers. From the balcony could be seen a breathtaking view of Mount Zion, and the picturesque Old City of Jerusalem. The Mayor of Jerusalem, Mordechai Ish-Shalom, members of the "Exodus" cast, and more than a hundred-and-fifty Jerusalemites joined the family in the celebration. An illustrated Bible, inscribed to Dan by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, was among the many gifts presented to him.

The character of Dan Opatoshu's bar-mitzvah was influenced considerably by the simple fact that it had taken place in Israel. The more ostentatious and expensive reception, which has now become almost mandatory for bar-mitzvahs in the United States, would have been incongruous in the dignified and modest environment of the Holy City. Here, custom calls for a celebration concentrating on the significance of the event to the boy and his family.

Dan Opatoshu feels strongly that having had his bar-mitzvah in Israel made "all the difference in the world" to him. "Take my Haftorah today", he said. "It begins the story of Samson, the hero. Now that I have come to Israel, Samson seems much more real to me. I have been to the area of Zorah and Eshtaol where he was born. I have seen the Brook of Sorek, where he met Delilah."

ing changes permeated Jewish life, the report states:

"The independent, local Jewish community ceased. No more did there exist the concept of a full religious community. It disappeared primarily because Jews were no more dependent upon their own gregariousness for social life, protection, welfare, or even education. These were supplied normally by the government. Hence many Jews were not overjoyed with the gain of political freedom, for thereby they lost their religious autonomy.

"Previously Jews had to abide by the decisions of their community in every manner but the civil domain now abolished this authority. The enjoyment of civil rights established religion merely as a distinct private and personal concern and did not allow communal interference of any sort. Consequently communal cohesion disintegrated. Where a communal spirit is lacking, naturally, an individual dominates for better or for worse."

One of the great problems created by the disintegration of the community is, in the words of Dr. Judah L. Magnes, that "at the present time there is no representative, authoritative, permanent organization that dare speak for the Jewish people."

This is just one of the situations which would be alleviated, Dr. Hoenig says, with the reestablishment of the Jewish community. "The lessons of the past, the knowledge of the failures and successes of earlier communities can well serve us today. Analysis of each specific characteristic within the communal entity may finally lead to implementation of a desired communal program, namely the reestablishment, on a firm democratic basis, in the greatest aggregation of Jewry in all history, of a 'Kehillah Kadosha', as the Jewish religious community has always been traditionally defined and designated."

Dr. Hoenig, a native New Yorker, has served as educational director of the Young Israel Movement and was the rabbinical leader of Young Israel of Brooklyn for many years. He is the author of many publications, including "Guide to the Prophets", "Guide to Jewish History", "Guide to Jewish Observance", 'The Great Sanhedrin", "Saadia And His Life", and "Jewish Family Purity".

Dr. Hoenig was graduated from Talmudical Academy High School in 1923 and in 1927 received his B.S.S. degree from the College of the City of New York. In 1931 he was ordained by Yeshiva University's Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Theological Seminary; and in 1934 obtained his Ph.D. degree from Dropsie College, in Philadelphia, Pa. He was married in 1939 to the former Miss Ann Whitehorn and is the father of three sons and two daughters.

Yeshiva University, America's oldest and largest university under Jewish auspices, consists of 17 schools and divisions located at six teaching centers in New York City. Five thousand young men and women are pursuing courses in Jewish studies and liberal arts and sciences, leading to undergraduate, graduate, and professional degrees and diplomas. The University's Main Center is located at Amsterdam Avenue and 186th Street, Manhattan.

In the Combined Jewish Appeal, from November 7 to 21, in Montreal, the corporations division will be headed this year by Arthur Ruddy, top left, 639 Lansdowne Avenue, as chairman, with Charles Bronfman, 15 Belvedere Road, left, and Cecil Pascal, 643 Lansdowne Avenue, above, as associate chairmen, to raise funds among business firms in the community-at-large which are specially earmarked for agencies of the Federation of Jewish Community Services which offer many services on a non-sectarian basis. Arthur Ruddy is president of the Herzl Health Service Centre; and a member of the purchasing committee of the Federation. Charles H. Bronfman is a member of the executive committee of the Federation; a member of the Montreal Board of Trade; and a governor of the University of Waterloo, Ont. Mr. Pascal is a board member of Herzl Health Service Centre; and a member of the Rotary Club. They will work with: Lawrence Lande, A. B. Grossman, Theodore Lande, Harry Clark, Lawrence Finkelstein, Arthur Rudnikoff, as co-ordinators. Mr. Bronfman will be host to all campaigners in the division, at his home, on September 13, for a pre-campaign meeting. This division holds an annual open house at the Montefiore Club during the official period of the campaign.

Dr. Joseph Kaplan, left, chairman of the United States National Committee for the International Geophysical Year, will give a talk on "Science And International Cooperation" on September 7, at 8:30 p.m., in Moyse Hall, at McGill University, in Montreal, under the auspices of the Montreal Chapter of the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University. Lawrence M. Lande is president of the Montreal Chapter. Dr. Kaplan is a member of the Board of Governors of the Hebrew University and is associated with the physics department of the University of California. Admission to Dr. Kaplan's talk is free to members and their friends, but because seating at Moyse Hall is limited, ticket reservations must be made. Call Victor 4-2395.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.
